"pensions.market laid out the differences between pension providers in an easy and understandable way."

Amicus is a small charity that helps provide representation for those facing the death penalty in the United States.

Amicus needed to set-up an automatic enrolment pension for their workers in 2017. Like many other small UK businesses they had never provided a pension before.

"We're a charity, and that means we don't have a lot of money to spend but we want to look after our staff as best we can. We were looking for a trusted pension provider that we could work with quickly and which our staff would appreciate."

Margot Ravenscroft Director.

Pensions is an opaque market, with strange terminology and different options to consider: relief-at-source or net-pay-arrangement? Are employer charges value for money? Its difficult and time-consuming for small businesses to thoroughly research the autoenrolment market. Professional corporate advisers are often unaffordable.

This is where pensions.market helps. Its a free website which aggregates together and publishes publicly available information on leading pension providers. Our expert team then analyses that data and scores the providers based on 4 clearly understood perspectives:

1. The expert's perspective
2. An employee's perspective
3. An employer's perspective
4. The payroll industry's perspective

Margot continues:

"pensions.market laid out the differences between pension providers in an easy and understandable way. I could compare different options, and see the differences between the providers. The 'employee perspective' was particularly relevant for my company.

I referred my workers to pensions.market so they could better understand why I made the decision I did, and what it meant for them"
